Today, Indian leaders do acknowledge that they are at critical crossroads when it comes to bringing about systemic changes for a more sustainable and inclusive future.

A recent study indicates that leading Indian CEOs prioritise long term value creation as companies continue to focus on transformation. Strengthening resilience, focus on stronger stakeholder engagement, realigning sustainability goals remains high on the boardroom agenda.

19:00	Case Study: Roadmap to Net Zero At COP26 meet in Glasgow, India committed to achieving Net Zero emissions by 2070. For India to achieve its Net Zero ambitions, businesses will need to step up and take lead. In this session, we discuss what India's net zero announcement means for organisations today. What are the initiatives taken by business for decarbonization? How are business leaders address the challenges that crop up during transition to net-zero?
19:15	Fireside Chat: Breaking the glass ceiling According to a recent data shared by LinkedIn (July 13), only 15% C-suite roles are held by women in India as compared to 27% in US, 33% in Singapore and 25% in UK. It further suggests that women are more underrepresented, the higher you go up the seniority ladder. Despite this gap, there are a few leaders who were able to break the glass ceiling and serve as an inspiration. In this session, we navigate through the journeys of women leaders to understand the hurdles that they had to overcome.
19:40	The C-suite Conversation: Thinking business, people, and sustainability Indian business enterprises have a pivotal role to play in driving transformation across the spheres of growth, sustainability, and inclusivity. Today, the leadership suite has been presented with a singular opportunity to reimagine business growth, employee welfare and sustainability. Leaders must channel their collective wisdom to create a new operating model to navigate dynamic market realities. And they must discover this new world of work while being respectful and curious about employee perspectives and sustainability needs.
